1990 Primary Results for Democratic State Executive Committee

In the following results for Democratic State Executive Committee are listed in order of votes received, from high to low. Although male and female candidates are placed separately on the ballot, and two males and two females are to be elected, only two persons elected may come from the same county.

In 1956 the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals ruled in Meisel v. O'Brien that the prohibition against more than two being elected from any one county did not prevent two males or two females from the same county from being elected. Therefore, when a person receives the third or fourth highest votes over all, that person can only be declared elected if neither category -- county of residence or sex -- is already filled. This results in several candidates being eliminated even though they received more votes than others who are elected.

1990 Primary Results for
Republican State Executive Committee

In the following results for Democratic State Executive Committee are listed in order of votes received, from high to low. Although male and female candidates are placed separately on the ballot, and two males and two females are to be elected, only two persons elected may come from the same county.

In 1956 the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals ruled in Meisel v. O'Brien that the prohibition against more than two being elected from any one county did not prevent two males or two females from the same county from being elected. Therefore, when a person receives the third or fourth highest votes over all, that person can only be declared elected if neither category -- county of residence or sex -- is already filled. This results in several candidates being eliminated.
